BACKED DOWN?

Said That Standpatters Made Him Abandon Idea of Extra

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8—rresident Roosevelt has evidently changed his mind again about wanting Congress to do things right away for him. Early last winter, before the end of the Fifty-eighth winter, before the end of the Fifty-eighth Congress, there was great probability, according to intimations from the White House, that an extra session would be called soon after the adjournment, but the leaders were consulted, and it was decided to postpone the call until autumn. Finally it was announced with an air of definite settlement that the extra session would be summoned October 15, giving the President time to make his Southern trip of two weeks, beginning October 1. Later it was given out that a further postponement was decided upon, November 13 being the date of the call.

To-day the talk at the White House is that it is practically settled that there will be no extra session of Congress, before the regular meeting in December. While the President had not said in precise terms that he will not call the session, certain members of Congress now speak with entire confidence of their assurance that Congress will not meet until December. until December. The standpatters have made an unceasing fight against an extra session bringing every possible argument to bear, and evidently finally persuaded the sent an invitation to the President to spend two days, if possible, in Richmond when on his tour through the South in October, Mr. Page assured the President that the Mayor and a delegation wished to come on to supplement the request and invitation and arrange for his entertainment for at least two days, if he would give Richmond that much time. President Roosevelt told Mr. Page he greatly regretted that his stop would be too limited to give more than the better part of one day to Richmond.

Prosident Roosevelt is anxious to appoint young Sidney Smith Lee, son of Captain Dan Lee, of Falmouth, to be examined for a commission in the regular army, but the unusual size of the class about to be graduated at West Point minimizes the chances, at least for the present, of any available vacancy offering.
